

Reginald Hudlin

Executive Producer

Oscar, and Emmy nominated director and producer Reginald Hudlin is one of the most influential filmmakers of his generation. Hudlin's first feature film was House Party, which was recently inducted into the National Film Registry. Hudlin also directed the movies Boomerang and Candy Cane Lane with Eddie Murphy, Marshall with Chadwick Boseman and the award-winning documentaries The Black Godfather and Sidney. In addition, Hudlin produced the Oscar-Winning Django Unchained and the animated hit Bebe's Kids.

Hudlin's latest movie, Number One On The Call Sheet, debuts in March on Apple +.

Hudlin is the second African American to executive produce the Oscars® (2016) and the first African American to executive produce the Emmys® (2020, 2021, 2022). This is his 13th year as executive producer of the NAACP Image Awards.

As a comic book writer, Hudlin created award-winning runs on The Black Panther and Spiderman and is an owner of Milestone Media, which features characters like Static Shock.

Hudlin has been honored by numerous esteemed organizations including the NAACP, The American Civil Liberties Union, The United Negro College Fund, The Sundance Film Festival, The American Film Institute, The San Diego Comic-Con, The African American Film Critics Association, The Critics' Choice Awards, and many more venerable organizations.
